Training:

Linda Tellington-Jones will be presenting a unique training, and the first of its kind ever delivered in the United States. Participants include four dressage riders whose horses will show the difference TTouch and Tellington Training makes through body work, ground exercises and the Tellington work under saddle including the Promise Wrap, the Balance Rein, and riding without a bridle. These techniques and lessons will demonstrate how to develop a more effective partnership for performance through the body, mind and spirit of both the horse and the rider. Ten other students without horses will be observing as well as practicing TTouch and ground work techniques which result in enhanced trust and performance, including reduced stress for improved well-being of these horses. Linda will also focus on some of the concepts she has written about in her book, Dressage with Mind, Body and Soul, including the importance of breathing and the concept that how you see your horse can affect their behavior, performance, health, and willingness to cooperate. The four dressage riders will each have an individual hour session with Linda and start applying what they've learned.

Meals: Water is a must all year long in this dry climate, so bring a water bottle. Water, tea and light snacks are provided at the training, however you will need to bring your own boxed lunch.

THINGS YOU SHOULD KNOW:

Santa Fe is located at 7,000 feet above sea level in the Sangre de Cristo Mountains; it can take your body a day of two to adapt to the high altitude. Weather in the high desert is comfortably dry but can have rapid temperature changes. It is common to have 30-degree temperature differences between day and night. In April, the normal high is 67°F and normal low is 39°F. A hat and sunblock are recommended for protection from the sun at this elevation, and staying well hydrated is a must all year in this dry climate.
